

The Carolina Mountains:
Photography of MARGARET MORLEY

Join Us to explore the North Carolina mountains
through Morley's lens

Margaret Morley's compelling images reveal intimate glimpses of life around the turn of the twentieth century, capturing the land and the primitive ways of mountaineers, just as railroads, industry, tourists, and home missionaries were introducing change.

Engaging prose from Morley's book, The Carolina Mountains, will accompany each photograph. Like azaleas bursting into bloom across a mountainside, Morley's vivid descriptions bring to life the colors, sights, and smells of the high country. The exhibit, with exciting additions from the museum's own collection, conveys admiration for the mountaineers, whom Morley called, "the most hospitable of created beings."

The
CHARLOTTE MUSEUM
of HISTORY

WHERE HISTORY HAS A HOME

3500 SHAMROCK DRIVE CHARLOTTE, NC 28215
WWW.CHARLOTTEMUSEUM.ORG
P 704.568.1774 F 704.566.1817

October 4, 2009
1:00-4:00pm

Experience traditional foodways, and its connection to us today. Historic demonstrators, vendors, and displays from local farms and food organizations will be available to museum visitors.

November 1, 2009
1:00-4:00pm

Learn about traditional textile production, and its development throughout the years. Historic demonstrators, vendors, and displays from local quilting and weaving organizations will be available to museum visitors. Bring in your own fabric heirlooms and learn from experts tips and tricks about how to preserve your very own treasures.

December 6, 2009
1:00-4:00pm

Museum visitors will be able to experience traditional photography, and its growth to where we are today. Demonstrators, vendors, and experts in the field of photography will be available to museum visitors. Bring in your own photographs and antique cameras, and learn from experts tips and tricks about how to protect your treasures for future years.

“To come from the turmoil of city life to these mountains is like taking a journey back into the history of the past.”

~ Margaret Morley